greetings

from the Office of the Dean

Dear Alumni and Friends:

As 2011 draws to a close, I have been reflecting on the tremendous changes affecting our profession. It's a long list, but two in particular seem to rise above all the rest: pervasive technology and globalization.

Those of you who have reached a certain age can compare the practice of law 30 years ago with what it is today. If you do, you'll probably find that technology has had an enormous impact on the legal profession. If you look ahead to 2050 — when most of our current first-year students will retire — globalization heads the list of trends that will have an equal impact on today's practitioners.

Our faculty members continue to make legal education in our global society a high priority. From the growing number of professional summer internships offered in India, Brazil, and China through the school's Center on the Global Legal Profession to our faculty's scholarship and teaching on the effects of globalization on our profession, the Maurer School of Law is on the forefront of educating tomorrow's lawyers for success in this challenging and interconnected world.

Faculty research on globalization is also informing our curriculum. In the spring semester, we will offer a seminar in transnational law. Taught by Professor Fred Aman, a world-renowned expert on the subject, this innovative course goes beyond traditional doctrines of international law and examines the relationships among domestic, international, and private-sector players that shape the legal framework of the global age. We now offer more than a dozen courses in the international arena.

In addition, we are participating in Law without Walls,[™] a pathbreaking consortium sponsored by the University of Miami School of Law. Law without Walls brings together students, faculty, practitioners, and entrepreneurs from around the world to innovate legal education and practice. Fordham, Harvard, Peking University School of Transnational Law, Sydney Law School, and University College London Laws are among the dozen schools participating in the program, which combines virtual and in-person learning. The Law School is also a member of Educating Tomorrow's Lawyers (ETL), a consortium of 19 law schools working together to encourage and facilitate innovation in legal education in order to train new lawyers to the highest standards of competence and professionalism.

Beyond these initiatives, our faculty and staff have been addressing what we must do as an institution to make sure that our students have the full range of competencies they need to be successful in the globalized world. Our first-year course on the legal profession has become an integral part of the curriculum over the past four years. Collaborative, mixed-channel consortia models similar to Law without Walls and ETL will further enable our faculty members, with the help of our boards, to design a curricular arc that maximizes our students' exposure to a much wider variety of courses and conferences beyond our own offerings, and at lower costs.

The geographic diversity and global experience of this year's first-year class of 240 reflects the fundamental changes in our profession and our world. More than 100 have worked for more than two years since receiving their undergraduate degree, and more than 100 have significant international experience. They have lived, studied or served in over fifty countries, from Argentina, Afghanistan, and Brazil to Ukraine, Uruguay, and Zambia. Twenty-two have advanced degrees. The students in our international graduate program further contribute to our global diversity, hailing from five continents and 20 countries.

The engagement of our alumni and friends continues to make a tremendous difference in the success of the school. More than 900 of you volunteered your time and talent in a wide array of activities, from judging Moot Court to speaking at a Career Choices session. And your financial support is making a critical difference in our ability to grow to meet the challenges ahead. Your generosity is deeply appreciated.

In January 2012, I begin a one-year term as president of the Association of American Law Schools. In preparation for this, I have been working with our peer law schools to examine what it will take to train the next generation of lawyers to become the ethical leaders of an increasingly global society. There are as many ways to accomplish this goal as there are law schools, but one fact is certain and inevitable: Our world is becoming smaller and more interdependent, and law schools themselves are becoming sites of globalization. Law schools such as ours, schools that capitalize on this historic shift, will lead the way. Your continued generosity will enable us to continue this important work, and we are most grateful for your support.

All best,

diverse opportunities,
global destinations

A law degree continues to open the door to dozens of career opportunities — more than any other course of study. Lawyers from the Maurer School of Law work in private firms, in government, in business, in public advocacy, and in many other fields.

At Indiana Law, exploring and planning for the right career starts during the first year. One Ls attend career planning sessions, hear from alumni about their experiences in the profession, and assess their own strengths and interests. During the summer, they have the opportunity to apply their classroom learning in a variety of settings around the world, becoming immersed in other countries' legal systems, culture, and values. The growing influence of globalization makes these experiences an increasingly important part of a lawyer's professional competency.

The generosity of the Law School's alumni and friends helps our students gain real-life experiences that inform their future, both stateside and abroad. Here are just two examples.

Seeing the world in a new way: Stewart Fellows program grows to 11 students in two hemispheres

In the summer of 2010, six Indiana Law students spent several weeks in India, absorbing the culture and experiencing the legal profession in the world's largest democracy under the auspices of the Law School's Center on the Global Legal Profession. This year, the program expanded to 11 rising second-year students in two countries: Brazil and India.

Made possible by the generosity of Milton Stewart, JD'71, the Stewart Fellowships introduce students to the profession through hands-on experience in highly reputed law firms, corporations, and non-governmental organizations (NGOs). Nine students interned in India, where they worked for a law firm, a legal-process outsourcer, or an NGO. The four NGO interns were also named Holdeen Scholars in honor of the Unitarian Universalist Holdeen India Program, which provided additional support through its director, Kathy Sreedhar.

Danny Thiemann, who worked as an intern at the Delhi-based full-service law firm, Trilegal, says the experience enabled him to improve his legal skills while linking theory and practice.

Milton Stewart, JD'71

“Delhi helped me see the world in a new way,” he said. “Before my time in India, I had been working on how to prevent conflict related to resource extraction in Latin America. This work is mainly theoretical and involves surveys of successful programs elsewhere that may be adapted for Central American countries. However, India brought the urgency of energy problems and their impact on the environment before my eyes every day.”

Thiemann had many opportunities to experience the Indian legal system upfront. “Several times during my internship, I was asked to help counsel who were arguing for changes in public policy before the India Central Electricity Commission and the Supreme Court,” he said. “The internship not only sharpened my legal research and writing skills, but also let me see firsthand some of India’s top lawyers work through problems and respond on their feet to tough questions. I left the experience with a broadened perspective and renewed sense of urgency to continue working on these issues in other regions of the world. I’m very grateful for the opportunity.”

The other Stewart Fellows in India — Louise Barrett, Jerry Carter, Ross Friedman, Nick Haering, Melanie Jesteadt, Krista Lewis, Tara Paul, and Ashley Rozier — reported similarly rewarding experiences during their internships. Read more about them on the Center’s website, globalprofession.law.indiana.edu.

Meanwhile, halfway across the globe, two Indiana Law students spent eight weeks in São Paulo, gaining firsthand experience in both law firm and in-house settings. Viviana Gonzalez and Eli Roberts divided their time between Demarest & Almeida Advogados, one of Brazil’s largest law firms, and Votorantim Group, a diversified industrial conglomerate with interests in finance, energy, steel, and paper.

“Working in two settings was a fantastic experience,” Gonzalez said. “At Votorantim, I did contract work in the corporate legal department and was a liaison with in-house lawyers in other parts of the company, not only in Brazil, but also in Peru, Argentina, and Colombia. I also had the opportunity to visit their aluminum, cement, and cellulose plants where I learned how business and manufacturing combine with the law.

“My experience at Demarest & Almeida had a lot of variety, including regulatory work, which went well with my prior career in the medical devices industry. The firm’s corporate department was much bigger than Votorantim’s, but both places welcomed me and treated me really well. I was just another Brazilian.”

Viviana Gonzalez and Eli Roberts

Gonzalez saw her time working in Brazil as instrumental in helping her choose the right career. “Other schools have study abroad programs, but I’m not aware of any others that offer a work experience,” she said. “Student life is very different from professional life, and actually working abroad gave me a completely different perspective.”

Plans for 2012 call for expansion of the Stewart Fellowships to other countries, including possibly China.

Innovative Indiana Law/SKKU degree captures “best of both”

It’s no secret that South Korea is on the leading edge of business innovation. Demand for consumer goods and a favorable manufacturing climate have propelled the country’s GDP to 14th in the world. Thanks to an innovative partnership between the Maurer School of Law and a forward-thinking Korean business school, students can earn a JD/MBA that captures the best of both worlds.

Founded in 2008, the joint degree program with Seoul’s Sungkyunkwan University (SKKU) enables students to earn a JD from the Maurer School of Law and an international MBA from SKKU. It is believed to be the only program of its kind in the world.

“The program offers an American, English-speaking MBA that closely follows the Kelley School of Business curriculum,” explained Mark E. Need, JD/MBA’92, clinical associate professor of law and director, Elmore Entrepreneurship Law Clinic, and faculty director, JD/MBA programs. “It is unique, though, as the students earn the MBA in Korea, immersed in the culture, business practices, and values of an entirely different society. Those are skills that will benefit business lawyers regardless of where they practice.”

Nathan Wenk, JD/MBA’12, spent the past year at SKKU before returning to Bloomington to complete his joint degree. “I thoroughly enjoyed the time I spent in Seoul, learning about business — but also learning about another culture,” he said. “There is no substitute for being immersed in a foreign society. Being in social, educational, and business settings with my international peers gave me a new perspective on how communication can vary around the world.”

JaeWon Kim (left), professor of law at Sungkyunkwan University Law School, greets Professor Mark E. Need in front of the school. The sign behind them reads, in ancient Chinese, “The Sharing of Knowledge is Everlasting, It Unites All Peoples and Leads Them in the Right Direction.”

This year, Jerry Carter, JD/MBA’13 is studying in Seoul. “I chose the Maurer School of Law because of an interest in the nexus between law, business, and globalization. The Law School has provided me with the opportunity to work in Japan (1L summer), to work in India (2L summer), and now to study and work in Korea,” he said.

“The Indiana Law/SKKU program furthers my understanding of Asia with knowledge of the Korean language and culture, teaches me the analytical culture of law to adeptly identify problems, and teaches me the practical culture of business to collaboratively solve problems. I am, of course, meeting wonderful people and having the time of my life as I pursue this knowledge. I feel honored to be associated with these two world-class programs.”

The two schools are continuing to explore and implement creative collaborations. Need has assisted his Korean colleagues, including SKKU Law School Professor JaeWon Kim, with the design of a business law clinic closely modeled on the Kelley/Maurer jointly sponsored Elmore Entrepreneurship Law Clinic endowed by D.G. Elmore, JD’58, and D.G. Elmore, Jr., JD/MBA’84. “SKKU has recently opened a business law clinic, and I had the pleasure of visiting it in October of this year,” Need reported. “It’s exciting to see these programs coming together and providing new and creative ways to prepare students for the future.”

DISTINGUISHED SERVICE AWARD WINNERS TO BE HONORED MARCH 22

The Law School’s selection committee has announced the winners of the 2011 Maurer School of Law Distinguished Service Award. Once again, the pool of nominees was an extremely talented group of alumni, and the selection committee had a very difficult time choosing the winners.

Here are this year’s DSA recipients, all of whom have demonstrated tremendous service to their communities:

Robert D. Aronson, JD’77. As principal attorney for Aronson & Associates P.A. in Minneapolis, Aronson has devoted his career and much of his personal life to ensuring access to legal assistance for immigrants and to enhancing the resettlement experience of refugees and their families.

Jeffrey S. Davidson, JD’73. While building a successful career in commercial litigation as a partner with Kirkland & Ellis LLP in Los Angeles, Davidson has dedicated himself to providing access to justice for the citizens of California.

Kellye Y. Testy, JD’91. On her way to becoming Dean of the University of Washington School of Law in Seattle, Testy has become well-known for her inspiring commitment to diversity and social justice issues within the legal profession.

This year’s winners will be recognized on March 22, 2012, in the Moot Court Room at 4:00 p.m. For more information, contact Andrea Havill at (812) 855-3015 or ahavill@indiana.edu.

NEW SFR OMT HEC ENT ERS

The Maurer School of Law's six research centers conduct breakthrough research in areas from cybersecurity to constitutional democracy. Students play an active role in the Centers' work, giving them practical experience and helping shape their career objectives. Here is an update on the Centers' recent activities.

The Center for Intellectual Property Research has been closely involved in its students' scholarly pursuits. In October, Prof. Mark D. Janis, JD'89, Robert A. Lucas Chair of Law and the Center's director, accompanied 11 students to Washington, D.C. for the annual meeting of the American Intellectual Property Law Association. The students attended sessions and networked with alumni and IP Advisory Board members, including Greg Castanias, JD'90, Erica Anderson, and Alison Kerndt, and toured the Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit with Scott Allen, JD'12, who is working as an extern for Chief Judge Randall Rader.

Four Indiana Law students completed IP externships last summer.

Justin Macy and Kate McTavish, JD'13, spent last summer as Cook IP Fellows in Bloomington. Their externships were made possible through a generous gift from Cook Medical Technologies LLC, an internationally recognized medical device manufacturer.

Lucas Amodio, JD'12, and Tearra Vaughn, JD'13, worked in Washington, D.C. for the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office.

The latest issue of IP Theory, the Center's online scholarly journal, features a paper on Myriad Genetics, a controversial case involving gene patent eligibility, written by Prof. Chris Holman of the University of Missouri Kansas City.

The Law School's Intellectual Property Association attests to the growing interest in the Center's work. With 85 members, it is among the largest of the school's 30-plus student organizations. More information about the Center and IP Theory can be found at ip.law.indiana.edu.

Mark D. Janis, JD'89

On October 19, Maurer School of Law students were treated to a visit with Chief Judge Randall Rader of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit.

Carole Silver, JD'80

At the Center on the Global Legal Profession, Carole Silver, JD'80, professor of law, has completed important research on the value of a U.S. legal education in today's global market.

In a Georgetown Journal of Legal Ethics article titled "The Variable Value of U.S. Legal Education in the Global Legal Services Market," Silver noted that many U.S. law firms now claim to be global organizations, and are seeking to occupy the same high status everywhere they work. Rather than simply supporting overseas offices as an indication of status, U.S.-based firms are striving for recognition as elite advisors around the world.

Against this background, Silver explores whether firms have identified a set of common characteristics and credentials that define a "global lawyer." She uses the U.S. LLM degree — a one-year, post-graduate degree aimed at foreign law graduates — as an entry point for unpacking the meaning of professional capital in the market for global legal services. By analyzing two case studies, one in Germany and one in China, she concludes that "While the U.S. LLM signals value in each jurisdiction, the strength and shape of the signal is determined by host country context."

Silver's work is part of her ongoing research on the legal profession in a global context. She is one of the few scholars using empirical evidence to examine globalization of the profession. Her research will inform further development of the Law School's curriculum for both JD and LLM students. The full article can be read on the Center's website, globalprofession.law.indiana.edu.

True to its mission of "bringing constitutionalism and the rule of law to new and struggling democracies," the Center for Constitutional Democracy (CCD) has been working closely on the ground with the emerging governments of two countries very much in the news: Libya and South Sudan.

"The fall of Muammar Gaddafi's regime completely changes the playing field in Libya," said David C. Williams, John S. Hastings professor of law and the CCD's executive director. "The good news is that we have been officially invited to advise the government on writing a new constitution."

David C. Williams

Williams explained that the CCD and the IU Center for the Study of the Middle East (CSME) have been invited to organize a conference on constitutionalism in Libya. In December, Williams and Feisal Istrabadi, JD’88, university scholar in international law and diplomacy and director of CSME, are visiting the University of Garyounis in Benghazi to lay the groundwork for the conference and meet with people interested in constitutional reform. “Our work will help raise awareness of the importance of constitutional democracy in this newly liberated country,” Williams said.

In South Sudan, which voted for independence from Sudan in January 2011, the government is still very much in transition. According to Williams, “The transitional constitution ratified in July of this year is in some ways worse than the interim constitution it replaced. We met with the leaders of the Sudan People’s Liberation Movement and plan to return when they are ready to draft a permanent constitution.”

“The situation in South Sudan is still very fluid,” Williams concluded. “It has an educated, morally earnest leadership class, and some national wealth, mainly in oil reserves. Depending on the politics and the stability of the new government, it could either become the next Botswana — or the next Zimbabwe.”

The Center for Law, Society, and Culture began the year with new leadership and a diverse offering of timely scholarly topics.

The Center’s new co-directors are Jayanth K. Krishnan, professor of law and Charles L. Whistler faculty fellow, and director of India Initiative, Center on the Global Legal Profession; and Ethan Michelson, associate professor of sociology and law.

The Center sponsors a colloquium every semester. This fall’s offerings centered on the theme of “Whither Law and Society’s Activist Agenda?” It included talks titled “The Death Penalty: Judge versus Jury” by Valerie Hans, Cornell Law School; “Democracy of Discipline? Economic Globalization and the Architecture of Government,” by Alasdair Roberts, Suffolk University Law School; and “The Few, the Proud, the Gays: Don’t Ask, Don’t Tell and the Trap of Tolerance,” by Suzanna Walters, Indiana University.

The Center’s two Jerome Hall Post-Doctoral Fellows, Leila Kavar and Katherine Turk, spoke, respectively, on “Legal Liberalism and the Juridical Construction of Immigrant Rights in the United States and France, 1973-1983” and “Our Militancy is in Our Openness: Gay Employment Rights Activism and the Question of Sexual Orientation under Title VII, 1964-1990.” Visit the Center’s website: law.indiana.edu/centers/lawsociety.

The Center for Applied Cybersecurity Research has teamed with the Oxford Internet Institute (OII), a department of the University of Oxford, to create a new program that will allow students to earn a certification in information law and policy from the prestigious British university and a Master of Laws (LLM) degree from the Maurer School of Law.

Aimed primarily at international students, the new program will give students with an American law degree or non-U.S. equivalency the opportunity to take 14-16 credit hours of existing regular law courses in the broad area of information and intellectual property law.

Admitted students will spend the fall semester in Bloomington and the spring term at Oxford, where they will take specialized courses and complete a 10,000-word thesis. The thesis provides students the opportunity to apply the methods and approaches covered during their coursework and carry out a substantive piece of academic research on an information law and policy-related topic of their choice.

Students who complete 24 credit hours from IU or the equivalent, and an acceptable thesis, will receive an LLM degree from the Maurer School of Law and a Certificate in Information Law and Policy from the OII. “We are honored to join with a distinguished university to develop this program,” said Dean Robel. “A certification in information law and policy from Oxford will serve as an excellent complement to a Maurer School of Law LLM.”

The program has an initial term of three years and will be led by CACR Director Fred H. Cate, distinguished professor and C. Ben Dutton professor of law, and Oxford’s Viktor Mayer-Schönberger, professor of internet governance and regulation. The agreement takes effect immediately, with expectations that the first students will begin the program in fall 2012. Learn more at cacr.iu.edu.

George P. Smith, II, JD’64

The Center for Law, Ethics, and Applied Research (CLEAR) in Health Information welcomed a distinguished alumnus to the Law School on November 9 as the Center’s first visiting fellow.

George P. Smith, II, JD’64, delivered the Center’s first public lecture in tribute to his late friend, former IU President Myles N. Brand. The lecture was titled “Managing End-of-Life Care: Medico-Legal, Social, Ethical, and Philosophical Challenges.” Dr. Brand died of pancreatic cancer in 2009.

A professor of law at Catholic University in Washington, D.C., Smith has devoted significant time throughout his career to the subject of palliative care. His lecture analyzed the two foundational challenges to human health care at the end-state of life: the extent to which a patient with a terminal illness can control his or her treatment options, and the level of state control and intervention in the dying process.

“The topics of death and of dying are a popular concern,” Smith said. “There will never be one, unified national consensus on the extent to which the state should protect the dying and allow its members to die a ‘good death’ without unnecessary suffering and with compassion.”

Distinguished professor Fred H. Cate, director of CLEAR and the C. Ben Dutton professor of law, said Smith is a tremendous scholar. “George P. Smith is an internationally recognized authority in health ethics and law,” he said. “We are honored to have him as CLEAR’s first visiting fellow.”

Smith’s lecture may be viewed on Indiana Law’s YouTube page (iumaurerlaw), accessible from the Law School’s website: law.indiana.edu.

PROFS. BAUDE AND LONG REMEMBERED FOR THEIR LEGACIES

The Maurer School of Law community gathered in the Moot Court Room twice this fall to remember two distinguished professors.

Prof. Dennis Long, JD/MSES’98, was honored on August 25 for his contributions to the legal profession and for his influence as an outstanding teacher. He died unexpectedly on August 4. Prof. Don Gjerdingen offered a moving tribute about Long’s influence on students and the example he set for the wider world. Other remembrances came from Profs. Gene Shreve and Fred Cate, and from Henry Efroymson, a partner at Ice Miller LLP in Indianapolis who was Long’s supervising attorney when he practiced there.

On October 28, Prof. Patrick Baude was remembered in a tribute from family, colleagues, and friends. He died on January 26 after a brief illness.

Prof. Jeffrey Stake recalled his friend’s extraordinary intelligence and memory. “Pat absorbed it all,” he said. “His mind was a compendious catalogue of information, all indexed and ready for instant replay whenever the situation called for it. Not only could Pat recall ideas; he could usually express them more cogently and elegantly than their original author.” Malcolm Abrams, publisher of Bloom magazine, entertained the audience with witty and perceptive gems from Baude’s regular wine column.

Dean Robel praised Baude’s gifts as a teacher. “Through the brilliance of his mind, he took the visible and the ordinary and showed us the invisible and the extraordinary. . .He did it with humor and humility and without flashiness. His gift wasn’t to make complex things simple; it was to make students appreciate and relish complexity. In Pat’s class, you needed to be able to have the guts to put your pencil down, turn off your laptop, and listen. If you could do that, you began to learn how you could turn an idea just slightly and subtly, and if you engaged with that over time, and you listened, he would show you how. Not as well as he could do it, of course, but well enough to start your professional life, and to look back at his teaching as the thing that set you on your path.”

Gregory Zoeller, JD’82, the Indiana attorney general; Roger Dworkin, Robert A. Lucas professor emeritus of law; and Baude’s son, Jonathan, also shared their remembrances.

The tributes to Profs.s Long and Baude, along with a moving video about each, can be viewed on the Law School’s YouTube page (iumaurerlaw), accessible from the school’s website, law.indiana.edu. In addition, the fall 2011 issue of the Indiana Law Journal contains tributes to Baude by Hon. Randall T. Shepard, chief justice of Indiana; Dean Robel, Prof. Daniel O. Conkle; Prof. Laura J. Cooper, University of Minnesota Law School; Prof. Emeritus Roger B. Dworkin; and Prof. Jeffrey E. Stake. These may be read at ilj.law.indiana.edu.

SHREVE SHARES PASSION FOR AFRICAN ART

Gene Shreve, Richard S. Melvin professor of law, has donated a significant piece of African art to the Maurer School of Law.

A knowledgeable and passionate collector, Prof. Gene Shreve first became interested in African art several years ago when teaching at the Université Panthéon-Assas (Paris II). “The university is located near the Place Maubert, where I used to see African artists displaying their work every day,” he recalled. “My attraction grew as time passed, and I began building my own collection.”

A few years later, Shreve had the opportunity to teach in Monrovia, Liberia, fulfilling a lifelong wish to visit Africa. He became fascinated not only by the aesthetic of African art, but also by the challenge of locating authentic works — ones actually used in ceremonies or for religious purposes.

The piece donated to the school (inset) is a sculptural ensemble depicting a criminal trial under customary law of the Baule people. It is from the Ivory Coast and dates from 1900-1920. In the sculpture, the accused appears before the village council. He has been caught stealing a pig, which is tethered at the right rear of the platform. He faces the head of the council, whose seniority is evidenced by the complexity of his coiffure. The empty stools indicate that this was not an important enough matter to require attendance of the full council. Behind the accused stands a member of the village who will administer punishment once the council announces its verdict (noted by the whip resting across his shoulder). Once the accused has been punished, he will be accepted back into the village. Had he been convicted of a more serious crime, he might have been banished — a harsh punishment in the Baule’s communitarian culture.

THROUGH DONATION TO LAW SCHOOL

Before moving to its permanent home at the Law School, Shreve’s gift may be going on the road. Monica Blackmun Visoná, assistant professor of art at the University of Kentucky, would like to include the piece for an exhibition in the next year or two, which she hopes will take place at the Smithsonian Institution’s National Museum of African Art. Visoná has also expressed interest in another Baule sculpture from Shreve’s collection.

Shreve has donated other pieces to Indiana University, including an equestrian marionette from the Bamana people, which is on permanent display at the IU Art Museum. He has also donated works that he describes as “raucous” to the university’s Kinsey Institute for Research in Sex, Gender, and Reproduction. An article on the subject, “African Art and the Serious Collector — an Essay,” was published in the April 2010 issue of Maine Antique Digest.

As passionate about teaching as he is about art, Shreve has received numerous teaching awards, including the prestigious Leon Wallace Teaching Award. A museum in itself, his office displays dozens of items from his collection alongside his scholarly works and recognition for his achievements in the classroom.

MAURER SCHOOL OF LAW PROFESSOR

As an on-the-ground advocate for democracy across the globe, IU Maurer School of Law Prof. David Williams is used to confronting danger. But his recent trip to Burma on behalf of that country’s burgeoning democracy movement landed him in more trouble than he bargained for.

Williams is executive director of Indiana Law’s Center for Constitutional Democracy, which brings leaders of reform movements in countries struggling for constitutional democracy together with university scholars who offer useful expertise. He regularly meets with people who are working for freedom from the ground up, not only in the cities where reforms are taking place, but also in the jungles, mountains, and deserts where people are trying to make a better future.

On a recent trip to Burma, Williams and the Center’s assistant director Ngun Cung (Andrew) Lian landed in Mangshi, China, en route to a meeting with the Kachin Independence Army in Burma. Unfortunately, the Ministry of State Security, China’s secret police, learned about their visit and began trailing them as soon as they left Beijing airport.

“The police followed our car all the way to the Burmese border,” Williams recalled. “Apparently they knew that I liked to trek through the jungle and cross the border on foot because by the time we got there, they had closed it to all traffic.”

CONVERTS EJECTION FROM CHINA TO DIPLOMATIC INVITATION

Another surprise awaited Williams and Lian when they arrived in a small Chinese border town. “About a dozen Chinese Secret Police officers were staying in the same hotel upon our arrival and watching us every step of our movements. (I saw them all at the interrogation center later),” Lian said. “The Chinese Security Force closed down the road from Border Town to KIO Headquarters for three days. Finally, they arrested and charged me, and I was fined for violation of Chinese social visa privileges.”

Williams and Lian managed to convert this incident into something of a diplomatic coup. “Our friends at the Department of State found out what was going on and enlisted the appropriate Chinese diplomats,” said Williams. “Once that happened, the local police — who had been treating us well anyway — became even more solicitous. The Chief Immigration Officer was very upset about the incident and apologized to us several times. He even prepared a huge dinner for us at his own expense. We’ve been invited back as honored guests of the Chinese government.”

INDIANA JOURNAL OF GLOBAL LEGAL STUDIES TO COMMEMORATE

The Indiana Journal of Global Legal Studies (IJGLS) was founded twenty years ago, in recognition of the fact that globalization was producing new legal institutions, new arenas of professionalism, new conceptions of law across academic disciplines and in practice — and accordingly, new directions for legal scholarship.

“We decided that the new journal would meet three criteria,” recalled Alfred C. Aman, Jr., Roscoe C. O’Byrne professor of law and co-founder of IJGLS. “It had to be interdisciplinary, peer-reviewed, and inclusive of globalization in the broadest sense.” Aman added that the last two criteria helped differentiate it from other existing global or transnational journals.

“By focusing directly on globalization as involving not only a shift in the scale of law, but also (and especially) the dynamics of domestic legal processes, we hope to advance understanding of the ways in which law, politics, culture, and economics respond to and shape each other,” Aman wrote in an introduction to the first issue of IJGLS in the fall of 1993. “This initial purpose has become more important during the past 20 years,” he said recently. “The ‘denationalizing’ of globalization, such as the increasing role of non-governmental organizations, multinational corporations, and other non-state actors, has become a particular focus of the Journal in recent issues.” The Journal’s dual peer review — by both student and faculty editors — further helps distinguish it.

IJGLS has emphasized symposia — both on campus and in print — as a forum for its contributors’ scholarship. A special 20th anniversary symposium is in the works for April 5-6, 2012. Titled “Globalization and Law: The Next Twenty Years,” it will focus on “law in the broadest sense as a site where globalization takes aspirational and institutional form, encounters critique and contestation, and shapes the practice of law as both academic discipline and professional art,” Aman wrote in an invitation to participants.

20TH YEAR WITH SYMPOSIUM

Several leading global scholars who contributed to IJGLS earliest issues will again participate in the symposium, including Jöst Delbruck, professor emeritus of law and a co-founder of IJGLS; Martin M. Shapiro, James W. and Isabel Coffroth professor of law at UC Berkeley School of Law; and Saskia Sassen, Robert S. Lynd professor of sociology at Columbia University.

In addition to serving as a Who’s Who of global legal scholars, IJGLS has attracted the interest of aspiring global lawyers. A student editorial board has guided the Journal’s content and direction since its founding. More than 600 Indiana Law alumni have participated in IJGLS over the past 20 years.

More information about the upcoming symposium and related events will be posted on IJGLS’ website, ijgls.indiana.edu.

Rose builds IP practice emphasizing the business of law

When patent attorney David A. Rose, JD'70, arrived in Bloomington more than 40 years ago, he wasn't sure where the practice of law would lead him. But several well-planned decisions have resulted in a rewarding professional career, in both lawyering and the business of lawyering.

Rose was on campus this fall as Practitioner-in-Residence in the Law School's Center for Intellectual Property Research. In an interview before a lunchtime meeting with students, he recalled that his training in ROTC while in law school took him to Maryland shortly after graduation for office training, but he was discharged early because the Army didn't need him.

"My wife and I were free to choose where we wanted to live," he said. "So we listed about 12 big cities that looked interesting, and Houston was one of them.

I interviewed for positions in corporate law, but because of my mechanical engineering degree and the demand for patent lawyers, I ended up selecting patent law, "even though I had no experience in the field."

Rose was hired by Butler & Binion, at that time one of Texas' largest firms, and was named partner in 1977. "After several years there, I began to realize that I enjoyed the business of law and could successfully manage a firm."

Members of the firm's IP section agreed, and in 1991 all nine of them left Butler to form Conley Rose. (Butler & Binion dissolved in 1999.)

The new firm gave Rose the chance to apply his skill and interest in the business of running a practice. "All of the IP lawyers joined us at the new firm. This gave us an instant client base because there was no one left at Butler & Binion who could handle their IP needs," he explained. "That helped our cash flow. As we grew to handle large patent portfolios, this experience helped us to build credibility with prospective clients. And if you're in a specialized practice like IP, you can go after large companies' business without getting in the way of their relationships with their outside general-practice firms."

Rose's strategy has worked. Under his leadership, Conley Rose has grown to nearly 40 professionals, with offices in Houston, Dallas, and Austin. Their clients include blue-chip enterprises in the energy and technology industries including HP, Texas Instruments, RIM, Sprint, Halliburton, Cameron, National-Oilwell Varco, and Chevron Phillips.

Rose cited another benefit of a smaller, specialized practice: the ability to set the culture. "I always advise law students that they should consider the big-firm and small-firm cultures carefully when weighing their career options. Smaller firms tend to be more flexible and family-oriented. You might work fewer hours for a lower base salary, with bonuses available to those who want to work longer hours. In a smaller firm, there's no one-size-fits-all model."

Although the practice has changed over the past 40 years — more fixed-fee arrangements, more contingent fee litigation, ever increasing overhead — Rose continues to find promise in the specialized practice model, even as he winds down his own involvement in the firm. "I've been working on succession as the founding shareholders in the firm retire," he said. "The founders of the firm have a lot of credibility with clients because we took the initial risk. Now we're helping others build that same credibility so the business we've built can continue to grow after we are gone."

HAMILTON REFLECTS ON 40 YEARS OF LITIGATION AND LEARNING

A partner in the Chicago office of Hinshaw & Culbertson LLP, Thomas M. Hamilton, JD'69 has built a practice in declaratory judgment litigation — a field that plays to his strengths, and one in which he's enjoyed every minute.

After graduation, Hamilton joined the then 29 attorneys of Hinshaw & Culbertson LLP in Chicago, a firm that today numbers nearly 500 attorneys. For more than 40 years, he's performed declaratory judgment litigation in commercial and professional insurance cases. "I always considered myself more of a writer, so it made sense for me to do work that supported our trial lawyers," he said. "As luck would have it, declaratory judgment work became a prima donna specialty right about the time I moved into it, so I had the chance to build my practice early."

Hamilton explained that Cook County's unusual chancery courts system operates under a much faster calendar. "We can deliver an opinion to our clients and get a resolution of most cases within 18 months," he said, adding that the system's clear procedural rules and on-point precedents help things run smoothly. "Opposing counsel is usually familiar with the system, and there's a great deal of respect among judges and members of the chancery bar," he said. "It's a wonderful area of practice."

In addition to his skill before the chancery bar, Hamilton has become an expert mediator, often leading clients to a solution in both the declaratory judgment action and the underlying liability claim. In 2005, he completed intensive training at Pepperdine University School of Law's Straus Institute for Dispute Resolution, and is a certified mediator in Cook County's Major Case Civil Mediation Program. "It's been great to learn a new area of the law this late in my career," he said.

Hamilton has seen many changes during the past 40 years. "When I started practicing, there was a delay of up to two months before the appellate courts published their advance sheets," he said. "So I used to write summaries of the cases, mimeograph them, and walk them around to judges' and other lawyers' offices. It was a great way for a guy from Fort Wayne, Indiana to get to know other members of the Chicago Bar." He added that the firm wouldn't let him make photocopies. "It was too expensive!" he laughed.

Despite the marvels of today's technology, Hamilton remembers fondly the days when he worked more closely with his assistant and younger lawyers in the firm. "More eyes used to look at work before it went out, which helped maintain quality," he said. "We used to have a docket clerk who'd been with us for 30 years, and he was one more check on accuracy before he physically walked the filings over to the court house. Now, more often than not, the other half of my team is my PC."

Hamilton has been an enthusiastic volunteer for the Law School, meeting with students to help them find positions in Chicago. "I wish I'd gotten involved earlier, because it's a great experience," he said. Although he extols the virtues of working for a firm, he encourages new lawyers to develop their own skills. "You are your own best manager," he said. "If you develop your own skill set and constantly improve it, that will serve you and your clients better than anything else."

Hamilton retires from Hinshaw on December 31, 2011, and he's following his own advice about skill development. "On January 2, 2012, I'll start a new job as interim vice president and corporate counsel for our clients, OMS National Insurance Company and Fortress Insurance Company. There's always something new to learn."

Law degree takes Michael to a new bench – this time, in a laboratory

Edward L. Michael, JD'81, started law school with a goal of practicing as a trial lawyer in Chicago. But he soon found that his legal training took him in other directions.

"Like a lot of law students, I interviewed on campus with the Chicago firms and took a job with Chadwell & Kayser, which is now out of business," he recalled. "I was assigned to a small case 'way up in Lake County.' One of the firm's top partners represented the client. And that client was Abbott," he said, referring to the global health care company headquartered in the Chicago suburbs.

Michael remembered that the case involved arguing a point of civil procedure law before the judge. "Unfortunately," he said, "the lawyer on the other side was Philip W. Tone, who had been a U.S. Court of Appeals judge before joining the Jenner & Block firm. After I had finished arguing my point, he pointed out to the judge that he had written the Illinois Civil Procedure Code."

Despite this somewhat inauspicious beginning, Michael found himself doing more and more work for Abbott, and in 1985 he was offered a position in the company's legal department. "The department was a lot smaller than it is now, and I got to work on litigation for most divisions," he said. "I was assigned early on to a diagnostics case, and a couple of years after that I was offered a group marketing manager position."

Michael's new role as a business executive soon took him overseas, where he was vice president for Europe, Africa, and the Middle East. Additional assignments led to a promotion in 2007 to his current role as executive vice president, diagnostics, in charge of the company's diagnostics, molecular, and point-of-care businesses.

Although Michael has spent most of the past two decades on the business side of Abbott, he continues to use his legal training. "My degree has helped with everything I've done," he said. "Learning the law gave me a new way to think about problems. Plus legal issues always come up in business situations — contracts, labor law, intellectual property, tax." And as head of a business with 75 percent of its sales outside the U.S., Michael says his law degree has helped him confront the challenges of globalization. "Lawyers have to be more than technicians. We have to know the world and know how to give good advice in the context of a particular country's culture." He added the pace of globalization will only accelerate, making these skills more important than ever for future practitioners.

Michael credits his success to his being passionate about his career. "Try to find something you enjoy doing," he advises future lawyers. "Opportunities present themselves when you're doing what you like to do — and when you do it well."

STUDENTS RAISE PROFILE OF LGBT LAWYER COMMUNITY

The generosity of alumni and friends of Indiana Law, together with the energy of a group of dedicated students, have raised the profile of the school's lesbian, gay, bisexual, and transgendered (LGBT) community.

The LGBT Alumni Advisory Board has sponsored two symposia on timely and controversial topics affecting the LGBT community. On April 7, a panel of legal and academic experts convened to discuss recent developments on same-sex marriage and the Defense of Marriage Act. The symposium, "Same-Sex Marriage and the Future of DOMA: Law, Politics, Federalism, and Families," focused on lawsuits challenging the federal Defense of Marriage Act and recent controversies over whether the government should continue defending DOMA. Maura Healey, chief of the Civil Rights Division of the Massachusetts Attorney General's Office, delivered a lecture titled "One State's Challenge to DOMA." Massachusetts was the first state to legalize same-sex marriage and filed suit against DOMA in 2009. The following experts participated in the panel discussion:

- Thomas M. Fisher, JD'04, Solicitor General, State of Indiana
- Dawn Johnsen, Walter W. Foskett professor of law and former Deputy Assistant Attorney General, U.S. Department of Justice
- Brian Powell, Rudy Professor of Sociology, IU College of Arts and Sciences, and co-author of Counted Out: Same-sex Relations and Americans' Definitions of the Family
- Deborah Widiss, Associate Professor

Steve Sanders, a lecturer at the University of Michigan Law School, moderated the panel discussion.

On November 3, a former judge who struck down Proposition 8, the California voter initiative banning same-sex marriage, delivered a lecture titled "On the Bench and in the Game." Vaughn R. Walker, former chief judge of the U.S. District Court for the Northern District of California, ruled on Aug. 4, 2010, in Perry v. Schwarzenegger that Proposition 8 was unconstitutional under both the due process and equal protection clauses of the U.S. Constitution. Proposition 8 was a voter initiative-constitutional amendment that eliminated the right of same-sex couples to marry.

Walker is the first known gay person to serve as a federal judge. As such, his decision generated controversy not only for its substance, but also because proponents of Proposition 8 asserted that Walker should have recused himself from the case.

A federal judge for 21 years, Walker decided many high-profile cases in civil liberties, securities fraud, national security, and other arenas. He retired from the bench in February 2011. His lecture centered on interplay between public policy and judicial review.

Charles G. Geyh, associate dean for research and John F. Kimberling professor of law, and Judy Failer, associate professor of political science, provided commentary. Both events took place before overflow crowds in the school's Moot Court Room.

"The efforts of our LGBT Advisory Board have been spectacular," said Dean Robel. In particular, she cited Board President Jerry J. Burgdoerfer, JD'83, Michael D. Shumate, and Steve Sanders for their generosity. "Jerry and Mike provided financial support for both events, as well as for students to participate in the Williams Institute Moot Court competition, the premier moot court competition on sexual orientation and gender identity legal issues." She also applauded the generosity of James L. Reed, Jr., JD'92 and K. Steven Blake, JD'90, in making these events possible.

"The relationship between the LGBT Alumni Advisory Board and OUTlaw is one of the cornerstones of the OUTlaw group," said Kyle Morrison, JD'13, president of OUTlaw, the school's LGBT student organization. "Through their time and donations, we have been able to offer organization members and the law school community educational, networking and social opportunities.

"Many of the members have volunteered to be mentors to OUTlaw members, and have hosted brunches and dinners to get to know the students better. A donation by one alum allowed us to attend the Lambda Legal Dinner, which gave us a chance to network in the Indianapolis legal community. Without the Board's support, OUTlaw would not be able to continue to grow and bring awareness to LGBT issues to students at the Law School," Morrison concluded.

ABOUT THE HONOR ROLL OF DONORS

Through annual gifts from donors, the Indiana University Maurer School of Law builds and sustains resources that support scholarships, law journals, trial advocacy programs, the Law Library, faculty development, and many other initiatives.

The Indiana Law community is deeply grateful to its donors for their investment. Every gift promotes the success of the School as it strives to produce the most prepared, educated, and ethical lawyers for today’s globally based profession.

The 2010–2011 Honor Roll of Donors reflects gifts from July 1, 2010 through June 30, 2011. Unrestricted gifts and annual gifts to student organizations, scholarships, and the Law Library are recognized as contributions to the Fund for Excellence. An asterisk indicates that the donor is deceased.

Every effort has been made to avoid errors. Please accept our apology if you have been listed incorrectly or omitted.

HONOR ROLL

GIVING BY CLASS

The Fund for Excellence 2010–2011 campaign raised $965,509. Special recognition goes to Class Agents Frank Tolbert, JD’55, and Don Dorfman, JD’57, who achieved alumni participation rates of at least 50 percent again this year. Larry R. Fisher, JD’68, raised the highest amount of any class ($60,965), and David L. Ferguson and Robert W. (Bill) Jonas, Jr., JD’81, raised the second-highest amount ($50,275). Thank you to all class agents and alumni for their support of and dedication to our law school!

Lisa C. McKinney, JD'92, has agreed to serve as chair of the school's Law Firm Challenge for 2011-12. The goal: 100% giving from Maurer alumni in participating firms. McKinney is a partner at Bose McKinney & Evans LLP, Indianapolis.

THE KIMBERLING SOCIETY

In November 2009, the Law School honored Jack Kimberling, JD '50, for his generosity and vision by creating The Kimberling Society: a special group of donors who have made arrangements to support the Law School in their estate planning.

Membership in The Kimberling Society is open to all who make or have made a planned or deferred gift commitment to the Law School. This is accomplished by naming the IU Maurer School of Law as a beneficiary through a bequest in a will, charitable remainder uni-trust or annuity trust, pooled income fund, charitable gift annuity, life insurance, retirement plan, or other life-income arrangements. Members in The Kimberling Society are automatically included in the IU Foundation's planned giving society, the Arbutus Society.

We are pleased to recognize and thank the members of The Kimberling Society:

a message from the alumni board president

Dear Friends:

It is my privilege to have been elected President of the Maurer School of Law's Alumni Board in October of this year.

As a member of the Alumni Board for the past ten years, I have witnessed the Board transform itself into a highly energized group dedicated to the continued improvement of our Law School, with full support and appreciation from Dean Lauren Robel. I have also had the opportunity to observe first-hand the energy, enthusiasm, and engagement of the school's students, faculty, and staff. Their collaborative efforts have resulted in an unparalleled legal learning environment and are producing highly competent and prepared lawyers to lead our profession in the years ahead.

As alumni, all of us can play an important role in shaping future lawyers. Whether mentoring students, judging Moot Court, sharing experiences with first-year students, or networking over a cup of coffee, our advice matters. I hope that you will join me and the hundreds of alums who have contributed their time and talent to the school's most important objective: helping students find the career that's right for them.

I would like to thank Angela Neboyskey, JD'00, for her outstanding leadership of the Alumni Board during the past year. Her dedication and enthusiasm (and baking skills) will be hard to match!

Sincerely,

Joe O'Connor, JD'78

CLASS NOTES

+ 1950s

Wayne C. Ponader, LLB’56, was named a Sagamore of the Wabash. The award, one of Indiana’s highest individual honors, is given as a tribute to those who have rendered distinguished service to the state. Before his retirement, Ponader was a senior partner at the Indianapolis law firm Bose McKinney & Evans.

+ 1960s

George P. Smith II, JD’64, a professor at the Catholic University of America Columbus School of Law, was named the inaugural Center for Law, Ethics, and Applied Research (CLEAR) in Health Information fellow. Smith used his month-long stay at CLEAR Health to conduct research for a forthcoming book that examines end-of-life decision-making and palliative care. Smith presented his results on November 9 during a public lecture at the Law School honoring the memory of former IU President Myles Brand. Smith, a member of the Maurer School of Law Board of Visitors, first heard of CLEAR Health during the Board’s annual meeting. CLEAR is directed by Distinguished Professor Fred Cate.

+ Charles A. Cohen, JD’66, co-founding partner at the law firm of Cohen Garelick

& Glazier, has been elected president of the Indianapolis Hebrew Congregation Foundation. The Foundation exists to guard the heritage of Reform Judaism and to contribute to the lives of its members and their families. The foundation focuses on education, spiritual and cultural enrichment, appreciation of its members’ roles as good citizens and good Jews, and their responsibility and opportunity to help others less favorably positioned, all within the scope of the moral doctrines of Judaism.

+ Larry R. Fisher, JD’68, partner at Stuart & Branigin of Lafayette, Indiana, was named an Indiana Super Lawyer. Fisher has extensive experience in medical malpractice, products liability, antitrust, toxic torts, and insurance law. He primarily represents hospitals and physician groups that benefit from his consultation and advice on malpractice, risk management, medical staff bylaws, regulatory matters, and antitrust. Among the many highlights of his more than 40-year career, Fisher is proud to have served on the board of directors and executive committee for The Lafayette Life Insurance Company and to have advised the board and executive committee of a major hospital. Fisher also has served as national trial counsel for a major chemical company, handling cases throughout the United States. He was inducted as a Fellow of The American College of Trial Lawyers in 1990.

+ David T. Kasper, JD’69, was named Best Lawyers® 2012 “Indianapolis Legal Malpractice Lawyer of the Year.” Kasper concentrates his practice in litigation, professional malpractice, and insurance services. Representing insurance companies, he advises them concerning litigation, settlement, and mediation. He has also been included in Chambers USA® and Indiana Super Lawyers® from 2005-2011.

+ 1970s

Stephen H. Paul, JD’72, partner at Baker & Daniels, Indianapolis, has been elected by the American Property Tax Counsel as president for the 2011-12 term. The APTC members elected Paul during the organization’s 17th Annual Property Tax Seminar in San Francisco. The event also provided an opportunity for the organization’s property tax lawyer members to collaborate and learn about the current real estate market and practical solutions to economic challenges from various speakers.

+ Paul F. Donahue, JD’76, was named honorary consul of Liechtenstein for Chicago and the Midwest. Donahue was invited to accompany the ambassador of Liechtenstein on a trip to Terre Haute,

Robert H. McKinney, JD’52, has made a $24 million gift to the Indiana University School of Law – Indianapolis. The school has been renamed the Indiana University Robert H. McKinney School of Law in his honor. McKinney’s gift will provide funding for five endowed chairs to attract and retain nationally recognized faculty. It also establishes a $17.5 million endowment to fund McKinney Family Scholarships for outstanding students. Until his retirement in 2005, McKinney served as chairman and CEO of First Indiana Corporation, parent company of First Indiana Bank (now M&I Bank). He was also a founding partner of Bose McKinney & Evans LLP, which sponsors the Maurer School of Law’s Sherman Minton Moot Court Competition. McKinney served in the administration of President Jimmy Carter as chair of multiple agencies regulating the mortgage loan industry, where he established model non-discrimination regulations and promoted community investment. He was a trustee of Indiana University from 1989 to 1998 and served as president of the Board of Trustees from 1993 to 1994. (finis)

Indiana, where she spoke at Rose-Hulman Institute of Technology, and to Indianapolis for a lunch at the Indiana Bar Association and a meeting with Governor Mitch Daniels.

+ Stephen R. Pennell, JD’76, a partner at Stuart & Branigin of Lafayette, Indiana, has been named an Indiana Super Lawyer. Pennell has extensive experience as a trial attorney in Indiana and courts across the country. He served as national trial counsel for a pool product company in Atlanta for 16 years, during which time Steve appeared as lead trial counsel in cases in California, New York, Oregon, Idaho, Texas, Louisiana, Alabama, Mississippi, Florida, Tennessee, Maryland, and Massachusetts. Pennell is recognized as one of the leaders for the defense bar in Indiana, having served as president of the Defense Trial Counsel of Indiana (DTCI). In recognition of his accomplishments as president of DTCI, Defense Research Institute presented him with the Fred Sievert Award, which is given to the most outstanding leader of a state defense organization in the nation. Pennell was also presented with the Diplomat Award by the DTCI, which is given for lifetime achievement as a defense lawyer.

Ann M. DeLaney, JD’77, attorney at DeLaney & DeLaney, has stepped down from her position as the executive director of The Julian Center, an Indianapolis shelter for domestic violence victims. What was originally to be a two-year term morphed into a 15-year run for DeLaney, who has juggled the not-for-profit center’s leadership position with her prominent role in politics, her law practice, and her bankruptcy trusteeship.

+ Randall R. Riggs, JD’77, a partner at Frost Brown Todd’s Indianapolis office, was named Best Lawyers® 2012 “Indianapolis Product Liability Litigation Lawyer of the Year.” Riggs devotes his practice to the defense of vehicle/equipment manufacturers and distributors headquartered in the United States and internationally. He has acted as lead trial counsel in state and federal courts in 15 states and is a Fellow of the American College of Trial Lawyers. Riggs is a member of the firm’s Executive Committee and serves on Indiana Law’s Board of Visitors.

Charles Paul Sammut, JD’77, has joined the intellectual property law firm of Der-gosits & Noah as of counsel. Returning to private practice from Dolby Laboratories, he will focus on the preparation of formal opinions, patent litigation support, due diligence, and patent prosecution, with emphasis on mobile devices, messaging, wireless technologies, and digital signal processing. Before entering the practice of law in 1977, Sammut worked as a product engineer with Ford Motor Company. He is a member of the bars of California and Michigan, registered to practice before the United States Patent and Trademark Office, and a member of the Marin County Bar Association.

Michael E. Brown, JD/MBA’78, a partner at Kightlinger & Gray, LLP, was recently selected by his peers for inclusion in The Best Lawyers in America® 2012. Brown was selected in the area of Legal Malpractice Law – Defendants. He has been practicing law in Indiana since 1978 and is often a speaker on legal topics. His practice areas include bad faith, commercial litigation, constitutional law, first party insurance defense, insurance agents and brokers errors and omissions, insurance law and regulation, and professional liability litigation. Brown was also invited to join the Council on Litigation Management, a nonpartisan alliance of

Eskenazi gift
among largest ever
to a public hospital

Sidney D. Eskenazi, LLB’53, recently gave a $40 million gift to Wishard Health Services to be used toward building new hospital facilities. It is one of the largest gifts ever made to a public hospital in the United States. In recognition of the gift, the new hospital facility will be named the Sidney and Lois Eskenazi Hospital when it opens in 2013. Eskenazi is the founder and CEO of Sandor Development Co., a real-estate development company, which he named after his daughters, Sandy and Dori. In 2005 — following a substantial gift by the Eskenazis — the new Herron School of Art and Design building on the IUPUI campus was named Eskenazi Hall in their honor. (finis)

HALLOWEEN TRADITION DELIGHTS AND ENTERTAINS

Dozens of little bumblebees, ghosts, and goblins descended on the Maurer School of Law on October 31 for the school’s annual Halloween trick-or-treat and parade. Children of faculty, students, and staff made the rounds of classrooms and offices to collect treats, followed by a parade through the first floor. The festivities were sponsored by OWLS (Older and Wiser Law Students), one of the school’s 30+ student organizations.

CLASS REUNIONS

Members of the Classes of 1961, 1986, and 2001 met recently to catch up and talk over old times.

Check the Alumni page of law.indiana.edu for updates on future reunions.

Special thanks go to the alumni who organized their reunions: Gene McGarvey, Jack Scott, and Skip Harrell (1961); Adam Bain, Sean Maloney, and Marc Odier (1986); and Bob Lattas and Shiv O'Neill (2001).
